6. VALUE BASED EDUCATION: PAST AND PRESENT

Abstract:

Values and education are expected to go hand in hand. Education without values is of no use. Wealth maximisation should not and cannot be the sole purpose of the education system. Now-a-days, unfortunately, education, employment and examination have become synonyms. Concerted and integrated efforts should be made by all the stakeholders concerned with the present education system for instilling values in it. If an environment is created for blending age-old values go with the present education system, the present day society can benefit a lot.

Key Words: Values, value based education, wealth maximisation, erosion of values.

Prelude:

The word education is derived from the Latin root word 'educare' meaning to nourish, to bring up. Thus, the very purpose of the education is to nourish the values in the human beings. Time and again, the education assumed part and parcel of human existence. It is as old as human existence. Though the pattern of education changed with changing times, it remained an indispensable part of human existence. Moreover, the changing nature human needs also proved to be instrumental in changing the pattern of education. In ancient times, the purpose of education was centred-around 'awakening' and 'awareness' processes, but in modern times, the purpose of education is to satisfy the mundane needs of human beings. In olden times education was spirituality-oriented, while in modern times, it remained as a tool to satisfy economic needs of human beings. Thus, the face of education went on changing from spirituality-oriented to economic-oriented. Even though nature of education changed with changing times, the importance of education remained unaffected. Society, all over the world at all times, emphasize the importance of education. Thus, education plays an instrumental role in properly moulding the life of human beings.

"Values represent stable, long-lasting beliefs about what is important. They are evaluative standards that help us define what is right or wrong, good or bad, in the world". (Miner 124) They are the general beliefs which are usually lasting in nature, though they may change marginally according to changing times. These values always change in relation to in some social or cultural changes. Thus, the stature of values changes according to the social changes
